FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Dr. Carl L. Larson, director, Stella Duncan Memorial Institute, Montana State University, has been appointed to a committee of nationally known scientists to advise the U. S. Public Health Service. The announcement came from Dr. Frederick L. Stone, chief, Division of Research Facilities and Resources, National Institutes of Health.

The Scientific Review Committee will review applications for research construction grants and make recommendations to the National Advisory Council on Health Research Facilities. The council, in turn, makes recommendations to the Surgeon General for action on grant applications for matching funds for research construction.

"Besides the high level of scientific competence represented in the committee itself, the members will have as an additional resource a roster of eminent scientists and medical administrators who will be called upon to accompany committee members on visits to applicant institutions," Dr. Stone said.

Chairman of the new committee is Dr. Louis B. Flexner, chairman, Department of Anatomy, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine. Others named to the committee besides Dr. Larson, all department chairmen at medical schools or research centers, are Dr. Frank J. Dixon, Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation; Dr. Klaus Hofman, University of Pittsburgh; Dr. William D. Holden, Western Reserve University; Dr. Ernest W. Page, University of California; Dr. Edmund D. Pellegrino, University of Kentucky, and Dr. D. C. Tosteson, Duke University.
